An unlikely batting hero

NATURALLY: Shardul Thakur of India celebrates his 50 during the fourth Test against Australia in Brisbane on Sunday. Picture: AAP VIA REUTERS/DARREN ENGLAND

But Shardul Thakur points out that he's no dud with a bat

Regular captain Virat Kohli led the tributes to Shardul Thakur's brave batting in the Brisbane decider but the number eight batsman was underwhelmed by his praise as he never considered himself a dud with the bat. Thakur, playing his second Test, emerged as India's unlikely batting hero, top-scoring with a counter-attacking 67 to deny Australia a substantial first-innings lead.

Debutant Washington Sundar was his partner in a 123-run seventh-wicket stand as both made their maiden Test 50s in the fourth and final game of the series on Sunday.

They were not even part of India's original squad but were shoehorned into the team following injuries to frontline bowlers.

"Outstanding application and belief by @Sundarwashi5 and @imShard. This is what Test cricket is all about," tweeted Kohli, who returned home after the opening Test to attend the birth of his daughter.

Thakur, who claimed three wickets in Australia's first innings, said he did not want to waste an opportunity to impress with the bat. "I do believe I have some batting talent," the seamer said in a video conference.

"I do work on my batting in the nets. We wait for these moments, these opportunities, to contribute with the bat." Thakur brought up his 50 by hitting spinner Nathan Lyon for six and India, reeling at 186-6, were past the 500-mark when Pat Cummins pegged back his off-stump.

"We were not even looking at the scoreboard. The idea was to spend some time there," Thakur said. "We knew that their bowlers were tiring out a bit, so if we could hang in for one more hour we could be on top."

The 29-year-old said they patiently waited to punish loose balls. Meanwhile, paceman Josh Hazlewood defended the off-spinner, saying there was little for him in the pitch.

"Obviously the Indian players are great players of spin as well and we've seen that through the series." — Reuters
